COOPER HEWITT EXHIBITION TO FEATURE AMERICAN TEXTILE DESIGNER SUZIE ZUZEK

CELEBRATING THE DESIGNER BEHIND THE ICONIC PRINTS USED BY LILLY PULITZER, 1962–1985

AUG. 15, 2019

Cooper Hewitt, Smithsonian Design Museum will present an exhibition celebrating the prolific textile designer Suzie Zuzek (Agnes Helen Zuzek de Poo, American, 1920–2011) in spring 2020. Her imaginative designs and playful prints played a key role in the success of the Lilly Pulitzer clothing line in the 1960s and 1970s. “Suzie Zuzek for Lilly Pulitzer: The Prints That Made the Fashion Brand” will be the first museum exhibition to reveal the nature and scope of Zuzek’s artistic contribution to the iconic Pulitzer style. On view May 15 through Dec. 7, 2020, the exhibition will feature more than 35 original watercolor and gouache design drawings by Zuzek, alongside finished screen-printed textiles and some of the fashions that made them famous.

Between 1962 and 1985, Zuzek created over 1,500 designs for Key West Hand Print Fabrics in Key West, Florida, which were used by Pulitzer. Pulitzer developed a close partnership with the screen-printing business, eagerly purchasing Zuzek’s fabrics and eventually buying a controlling interest in the company. The vibrant, fanciful prints of Lilly Pulitzer resortwear were instantly recognizable, defining a classic American look favored by fashion leaders such as Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and Audrey Hepburn.

“For nearly a quarter of a century, Zuzek’s limitless creativity powered the ‘Lilly look,’” said Caroline Baumann, director of Cooper Hewitt. “Long overdue for public recognition, this exhibition will tell the important story of a talented American designer who worked anonymously in support of a larger brand.”

The archive of Key West Hand Print Fabrics, now privately owned, includes watercolor designs and pen-and-ink drawings by Zuzek from her 23 years as a staff designer. Among the works on view will be ten drawings recently acquired for the museum’s collection through a gift from the archive. In their multiplicity, the designs showcase her extraordinarily creative treatment of various subjects, from mythical creatures to cosmology to the flora and fauna of the Florida Keys. Zuzek’s palette was typically naturalistic, employing both the brilliant hues of the tropical flowers that fill many of her designs and the subtle shades of browns, ochres and grays used in her renderings of animals. Invariably the fabrics for the Pulitzer brand were printed in beyond-bright, vivid colors. The exhibition will elucidate the process of translating an artist’s rendering to fabric, and ultimately fashion, through silkscreen printing.
